State groups pushing for single-payer health insurance

Kentuckians can tell state officials what should be done about health care at 15 hearings to be held Jan. 25 to Feb. 24 by the Kentucky Long-Term Policy Research Center.

The Louisville hearing will be held at 6 p.m.Wednesday, Feb. 2 at the Shelby Campus of the University of Louisville, 9001 Shelbyville Road at the Founders Union A and B. In Lexington, a hearing will be at 6 p.m. Monday, Feb. 1 at the Ramada Inn, 143 N. Broadway.

Other cities include Bowling Green (Feb. 16) Owensboro (Feb. 17) and Prestonsburg (Feb. 22). For more information, go to the organization's web site at www.kltprc.net/news1.htm.

In December, Kentucky doctors formed the state chapter of Physicians for a National Health Program (PNHP-KY). That group and Kentuckians for Single Payer Health Care (KSPH) are working to organize the public to assure quality health care for everyone through a single payer system.

U.S. Rep. John Conyers of Michigan has introduced the legislation, H.R. 676, that would make it happen. This single payer national health insurance plan would cover every person for all medically necessary care — including hospital, physician, mental health, dental, vision, rehab, nursing home, prescriptions, physical therapy, and home health.

The bill assures patients the right to choose their physicians and liberates physicians from control by the HMOs. H.R. 676 saves money, not by denying care, but by assuring preventive care. The bill cuts out the administrative waste by removing the private, profit making insurance companies and HMOs from the system. The bill transforms profit-making hospitals into nonprofits. The money saved from the administrative wastes and the profiteering is more than enough to assure quality care for all our people.

We all know the need. More than 18,000 die in the U.S. each year from lack of health insurance. About 45 million have no insurance at all. Over a two-year period, 82 million are without coverage at some point. All who have insurance are at risk of losing it as costs escalate or companies declare bankruptcy. Deductibles are growing rapidly forcing even the insured to choose between health care and other necessities. for an expensive operation for their son's cancer. Bush's prescription drug bill is a sham, and seniors are still unable to afford needed medication. Racial disparities in care are rampant as African Americans suffer a shocking 85,000 excess deaths per year.

Many people mistakenly think that the U.S. has the best health care in the world. It isn't so. The World Health Organization ranks us 37th. Our infant mortality rate is higher and our life expectancy lower than the industrialized countries that have national health care. The only thing that the U.S. is highest in is cost. We pay almost double, per capita, what other industrialized nations pay — close to $6,000 per person per year. So if we pay more, why don't we have the best health care?

The answer is that we have entrusted health ca re to investor owned HMOs, insurance companies and hospitals. These entities pay allegiance, by law, to the interests of their stockholders. They waste up to 31 percent in administration in their efforts to take in a much as possible and pay out as little as they can. PNHP estimates that we spend about $300 billion a year on administrative wastes — an amount large enough to cover all of the uninsured.

We cannot solve the problem with incremental changes. When HMOs began to kick newborns and their moms out of hospitals in 24 hours, the public demanded change. We passed a number of state laws to assure at least 48 hours. But we can't (continued on page 2)

Prime task today is to define democracy, Daniels says

FORsooth staff report

The United States is at a critical point in a centuries-old struggle between those trying to expand democracy and those who would constrict it, Ron Daniels told the Unity Dinner Dec. 9.

"One of the things I'm dumbfounded about (is) why the Democratic Party would want to run away from the label liberal or progressive or even left, because they are running away from the tradition that has always expanded democracy," Daniels said. "You just have to ask any person, white, black, red, yellow or brown, where did your social security come from, where did your medicaid come from, where did your consumer protection come from.... It didn't come from those who want to constrict democracy."

Daniels sharply criticized the Bush administration for trying to circumvent the Geneva Convention and other accords against torture, an approach he linked with abuse of prisoners by the U.S. in Iraq and Guantanamo naval base in Cuba.

"The United States of America says that in the name of prosecuting the war on terror that you can torture human beings (continued on page 5)

Challenging the centrist wing of the Democratic Party that favors abandoning minorities, labor and the poor, is a good place to start moving the struggle forward, he added.

Bhopal and Rubbertown: two places linked by woes

by Gracie Lewis

On Saturday, December 4, REACT (Rubbertown Emergency Action) held a candlelight vigil in front of DuPont Dow Elastomers on Camp Ground Road to commemorate the biggest ever industrial tragedy. At 6 p.m. about 100 persons converged on DuPont Dow Elastomers in solidarity with the victims of Bhopal, India.

Many attending were environmentalists from Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Colorado and Texas who had spent the day with us going door-to-door to gather signatures in our campaign to end toxic air pollution.

On December 3, 1984, thousands of people were gassed in their sleep as toxic chemicals leaked from a Union Carbide factory in Bhopal, India. Hundreds of thousands of people lost loved ones, health and livelihood.

In 2001, Dow Chemical bought Union Carbide and refused to pay compensation to the victims of Bhopal or clean up the site. We charge genocide.

REACT, standing in solidarity with Bhopal, India, talked to Ms. Rachna Dhingra with the International Campaign for Justice in Bhophal via a speaker phone at the vigil. It was heartwarming to know that this tragedy had not been forgotten around the world. REACT fully understands corporate greed. DuPont Dow opposes Mayor Jerry Abramson's plan to require chemical plants to reduce their emissions of toxic air pollution.

Right now, Greater Louisville, Inc.

says "no" to the mayor's Strategic Toxic Air Reduction (STAR) program. They put "profits before people."

REACT said "no" and presented Greater Louisville Inc. with the "Turkey of the Year award."

REACT stands in solidarity with people around the world in our struggle for clean air, and especially with those who have incurred injuries and deaths as a result of industry. People lost their lives there, and the victim's families, as well as those who survived this tragedy, should have received a settlement.

REACT will not remain silent in Rubbertown while people are suffering in Bhopal, India. We will stand in solidarity with Bhopal, until justice rolls down like a mighty stream.

Join in the struggle against environmental racism. Call or write Mayor Jerry Abramson and support his Strategic Toxic Air Reduction (STAR) Program to reduce emissions from industries. According to Mayor Abramson, the STAR program is a good balance between keeping and creating jobs and cleaning our air. REACT has evaluated the plan, and we agree.

Call on the Air Pollution Control Board to pass a resolution that recommends local control over local air in compliance with the federal Clean Air Act.

Asian tsunami victims to get help from concert, trip

A concert featuring Harry Pickens Monday, January 24 will raise money to help victims of the South Asian tsunami, which has killed about 150,000 people and threatened many more with disease.

The concert is slated for 8 to 9:15 p.m. at Comstock Hall at the University of Louisville. Admission is free, but donations for tsunami relief will be collected, organizers said.

An e-mail which called the concert part of a "Tsunami of Compassion" said the show will "tap the power of music, chant, sound, and silence to ease suffering, restore hope, and raise funds for victims of the recent devastation in South Asia."

For more information, call (502) 479-0697 or email tsunamiofcompassion@yahoo.com.

In another area initiative to help Tsunami victims, Interfaith Paths to Peace board member Gerry Stribling will be traveling to Sri Lanka at the end of January and hopes to provide help for children who lost parents in the disaster

Stribling is seeking donations to support this effort. He can be reached by cell phone at (502) 938-5312.

An e-mail said those who wish to help with a tax-deductible financial gift should make checks payable to Interfaith Paths to Peace and mail it to IPP at 425 South Second Street, Louisville, Ky. 40202. On the "for" line of the check, write Sri Lanka Fund.

legislate on every disease and every condition. The HMOs are constantly seeking ways to cut care and dump expensive patients. In Kentucky, when we passed a law to ensure some consumer accountability in health insurance, the insurance companies forced a retreat by threatening to pull out of the state. The market doesn't work for health care.

We need to pass HR 676. The bill now has 39 co-sponsors. How do we make what is morally right into what is also politically possible? We have to build a movement broad and powerful enough to make it happen. A few drops don't make a waterfall. We need a gusher. The cause is just. The answer is clear. So let us begin.

We are asking organizations to take a stand by endorsing HR 676. PNHP-KY and KSPHC have speakers willing to address any group. KSPHC meets the third Thursday of every month at 5:30 p.m. at Central Presbyterian Church, 4th and Kentucky streets. The next meeting is February 17, and you are invited to join with us. In the meantime, you can sign a petition for HR 676 on line at www.cnhpnow.org. You can read HR 676 and learn details at www.PNHP.org.

The local website is: http:// www.louisvillepeace.org/ kysinglepayerhealthcare.html. We have brochures, sample resolutions, and petitions available for anyone to distribute. And if you need something more, just let us know. Your ideas are welcome.

The Erie city council passed a resolution calling on all the Pennsylvania congresspersons to join in sponsoring HR 676. Are there cities in Kentucky where we can do that?

90 Years on Peace Frontiers

Since 1915, the Fellowship of Reconciliation in the United States has led campaigns to obtain legal rights for conscientious objectors, win civil rights for all Americans, end the Vietnam War, oppose U.S. intervention in the Third World, and reverse the superpowers' arms race. An interfaith pacifist organization, the FOR has members from many religious and ethnic traditions. It is part of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation, with affiliates in 40 countries.

In the development of its program FOR depends upon persons who seek to apply these principles to every area of life. If you are not already a member, we invite you to join us in this endeavor. As rights leader dies, his struggles and others continue Jim Forman died on January 10. A pioneer in the Civil Rights Movement, he became Executive Secretary of SNCC (Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee) in 1961 and was a key strategist and tactician. His involvement in the fight for Black liberation, reparations, workers' rights and proletarian internationalism was significant. Forman was a scholar and published author, but I remember him as a magnificent leader of our beloved SNCC.

The recent tsunami that took so many thousands of lives and livelihoods raises questions about whether poor nations have as much right as rich nations to be forewarned. But it also raises other issues.

On the United for Peace and Justice (UFPJ) website, geologist David Schwartzman wrote: "(T)he Pentagon has had a long interest in geophysical warfare, dating back to weather modification during the Vietnam War... which included possible triggering of earthquakes (small earthquakes have been triggered by water filling a reservoir above a dam), but I think it is extremely unlikely that this earthquake/tsunami was triggered by nuclear weapons testing.... But, as the media has mentioned, an early warning system (radio) for the tsunami (traveling some 300 km/hr over open ocean) could have saved many lives in Sri Lanka and India. A legitimate issue to the peace movement is of course the $100 billion spent in the continuing Iraq war/occupation which could have been used for meeting human needs including massive relief efforts now."

Lest we get too discouraged, there is good news to report. Good news for corporate America, that is. IBM is changing its defined-benefit pension plan to an all-401K crap-shoot at the stock market.

IBM retirees, twice in the last ten years, got shafted by pension changes. So IBM, rather than fixing the problem, decided to throw all its retirees onto the pyre known as the vagaries of private investment.

But it's not just corporations and their employees that are having problems. In early December, soon after Labor Paeans was put to bed, the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, 1.4 million strong, stepped up to the plate, as the New York Times reported Dec. 8: "Worried about the steady decline of organized labor, the Teamsters, one of the nation's largest unions, recommended withholding half of the $90 million that individual unions give the labor federation each year and using it to recruit more members."

If the climate for labor is problematic, the breathing environment for us all is no less confounding. The Organic Consumers Association reported on December 21: "Outgoing Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Michael Leavitt will release regulations today allowing a 2 million pound increase in 2005 in the use of methyl bromide, an ozone-depleting and cancer-causing farm chemical, in violation of both an international treaty and the Clean Air Act. This new action follows several other decisions by the Bush administration to allow more use of the pesticide. 'Catering to a handful of big chemical and agribusiness interests, the Bush administration is actually expanding the use of this dangerous, ozonedestroying chemical,' (reports environmentalist) David Doniger...

"More than three-quarters of the chemical will be used on two crops — Florida tomatoes and California strawberries." Bon appetit.

We reported in the last column about the right to have your vote counted fairly, unless, of course, you live in Ohio or Florida. During the joint Congressional session where the Bush presidential vote victory was blessed, two legislators challenged the improprieties.

The vote, of course, nonetheless was certified. Jesse Jackson wrote in the Chicago Sun-Times: "In the Ukraine, citizens are in the streets protesting what they charge is a fixed election. U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell expresses this nation's concern about apparent voting irregularities. The media give the dispute around-the-clock coverage. But in the United States, massive and systemic voter irregularities go unreported and unnoticed."

Some wag said that maybe we can solve Iraq's legal problems by giving them our Constitution, particularly since we don't use it anymore.

The health of the political process is not the only medical difficulty. Doctors seem to be having difficulties earning a living. The Associated Press reported December 27: "Doctors around the country are increasingly using methods popularized by labor unions to gain leverage in their fight against rising premiums for malpractice coverage."

The right-wing has seized upon this problem as a pretext to limit malpractice awards. Governors in Mississippi, Maryland, and here in Kentucky are hoping to stifle malpractice lawsuits and put a cap on awards.

While all but the wealthiest doctors are feeling the pinch, Black doctors face the extra burden of practicing-while-Black. Under the headline: "Clinics serving America's most depressed area forced to close Jan. 1," the San Francisco Bay View reported: "Legendary Baptist minister, physician, musician and activist Ronald V. Myers Sr., M.D., who logs 50,000 miles a year on muddy back roads bringing health care and hope to hundreds in the Mississippi Delta, may be forced to close his four clinics, in Tchula, Belzoni, Greenville and Indianola, on Jan. 1. His medical malpractice insurance company, though obligated to cover all physicians in the state, is canceling his insurance despite his never having had a claim filed against him.

"Mississippi's controversial new tort reform legislation gave the company sole discretion as to which doctors it will insure. Dr. Myers charges the company is wrongly denying coverage to Black physicians practicing in poor, primarily Black communities. Contending he is a victim of 'medical malpractice lynching,' he filed suit Dec. 8 against the company, but it may be too late to keep the clinics open."

The overarching problem is the system of medical care for profit. Too many doctors have made a killing, if you will excuse the word, by jacking up fees-forservice, owning laboratories they send their patients to for tests, consulting for big bucks with drug companies. Their current concerns about malpractice insurance costs are legitimate, but they don't come to court with clean hands.

Trial lawyers have pushed greedy and/ or incompetent physicians against a financial wall. They have represented aggrieved patients and forced a measure of justice. But they also have lined their own pockets, and too often have used medical malpractice as an easy ride to the good life.

Fortunately for the toiling masses, capitalism creates its own contradictions. Some entrepreneurs, feeling the medical pinch, are pushing for reforms jointly with unions and others.

City Limits Weekly reported Dec. 20: "Private employers could soon be forced to provide health insurance for their workers, under a new bill moving steadily toward (New York) City Council approval. The Health Care Security Act, introduced this fall, would require private employers in five industries—large groceries, industrial laundries, hotels, building services and construction—to either provide the insurance or pay into a citywide fund that would do it for them. Still in the early stages of negotiation, the bill already has (enough)

Spirituality, science tied in harmony

Earth Friendly, Re-Visioning Science and Spirituality through Aristotle, Thomas Aquinas and Rudolph Steiner

by Adrian M. Hofsteffer, OP, Lindesfarne Books, 2004, 196 pages.

reviewed by Corrine McCann

Reading the foreword, introduction and epilogue is essential to appreciating this excellent collection of articles on science and spirituality. The above sections offer insights about the author's life and commitment to her Dominican vocation and the pursuit of truth. Hofstetter's writings combine the wisdom of western philosophy, scientific theory and creation spirituality — integrating the three in this holistic gem of a book.

From the distant past, the teachings of Aristotle, Goethe, Aquinas and other philosophers lead us to the near and present teachings of Tarnas, Teilhard, Steiner and McClintock. These are just a few of the many who have influenced Hofstetter as educator, scientist, and woman of faith.

Earth Friendly is a 21st century frontier book of inquiry as well as challenge. What about the scientific theories regarding the origins of the universe? (pages 50 and 70). In what ways have technology and scientific progress degraded the earth? (p.43). Tell us more about cybernetics, cells and DNA. (The New Biology, chapter 10 and elsewhere).

What is the purpose of education? (Chapters 3 and 4). As Joan Chittister, O.S.B. states on the back cover, "Sr. Adrian Hofstetter is Dominican to the core..."

Her life as a vowed member of a religious order gives her the courage to challenge religious institutions and communities. This she does in a bold yet humble way. As a longtime social activist and advocate for peace and justice she suggests new models for sustainable living. Rudolph Steiner's Fellowship Community is given as an example of how to live in integrated and holistic ways.

Hofstetter's images of God, Church, theology, science, integrated spirituality, the earth and life itself are re-visioned. Her 15 essays in this pioneer collection are rich in the wisdom of western thought. Readers are offered the opportunity to rethink their own paradigms. This book captivates traditionalists as well as those on the cutting edge. It is a must for scientists, theologians, philosophers and ordinary people who are Earth friendly.

The reviewer lives in Crawfordsville, Ind. and is the former sustainable living coordinator for the St. Catharine, Ky. Dominican Sisters.

Corporations often impede being responsible for Earth

by Sister Rose Marie Cummins

Occasionally I have received an e-mail or; letter from someone in response to one of my Earth Alert columns where the writer tells me that I am anti-big business and transnational corporations, particularly large pharmaceutical and seed companies. One person suggested I'd rather see people starve than send genetically modified food to those dying of hunger. Or, at times, a writer has suggested that I am not supportive of this Presidential administration or the military.

What I have always wanted to be at the center of my consciousness as I write these columns is the earth and how to care for it. That is where I have chosen to put my efforts and energy right now. So, if I have spoken about the war in Iraq, I have tried to address what is happening with the earth as bombs destroy the infrastructure and the environment. I've tried to speak to the loss of human life, both of our soldiers, but also of Iraqi soldiers and civilians, too. I believe that if this generation does not learn how to make peace in our world — a task much harder than making war — that many children will grow up (or not) never knowing anything but war. I certainly don't believe we were created for that.

If I have spoken about large corporations, it is because I believe that many of them, not all, are harming our planet by their destructive business practices, the ways they operate in our communities and by their flagrant disregard for what happens with the water, air, and soil quality in the environment around them.

If I have spoken of this Presidential administration, it is because of what I have seen happening with the environmental gains that so many people have worked hard to attain. It is because I have seen us as a country losing respect with the rest of the world because of our duplicitous reasoning for preemptive war. And, this makes me heartsick.

Wendell Berry, a beloved Kentuckian farmer, writer, and conscience for us as Americans recently wrote the following:

"There are such things as economic weapons of mass destruction, and we have allowed them to be used against us.

'Can we actually suppose that we are wasting, polluting, and making ugly this beautiful land for the sake of patriotism and the love of God? Perhaps some of us would like to think so, but in fact this destruction is taking place because we have allowed ourselves to believe, and to live, a mated pair of economic lies: that nothing has a value that is not assigned to it by the market, and that the economic life of our communities can safely be handed over to the great corporations....

'Somehow we have lost or discarded any controlling sense of the interdependence of the Earth and the human capacity to use it well."

So, as we move on after the elections here in the United States, we will need to put away our rhetoric of "liberal" and "conservative." We will have to find ways to trust one another again if we are to move ahead and work for the common good. We can be smug and say that the American people have given a clear mandate to our President to undo environmental protections, declare war, stop stem cell research, or to work on a host of other issues. But, the reality is, we are one country. A large percentage did not vote for or give a clear mandate for those things.

Will we be happy that "we won!" or sad that "we lost" and attempt to make it through the next four years? Or, will we try to bridge the divide between us and try to understand where each is coming from?

I believe the latter is imperative. Our earth, our world depends on us. How can we learn to hear one another?

The writer is the director of the Dominican Earth Center of the Dominican Sisters of St. Catharine, Ky. Contact her at rosieop@kyol.net.

and then call ourselves civilized. This is uncivilized," he said.

Daniels questioned the stated purpose for the Iraq war, noting that no weapons of mass destruction were found in Iraq and that Saddam Hussein was just one of several brutal dictators, most of whom the U.S. has strongly supported.

Since when did being a bad dictator become the basis of U.S. policy?" he asked. "If that were the case we certainly would have moved against Pinochet. We certainly would have moved against Batista. We certainly would have moved against Somoza. We certainly would have invaded South Africa to overturn a ruthless regime of apartheid."

Others at the podium included Kraemer and Rev. Tim Duncan, a Kentucky Alliance board member, who spoke about Roosevelt Roberts (whose nickname was "Rosey"). Duncan, who worked with Roberts in Rubbertown Emergency Action (REACT), a group fighting toxic pollution in West Louisville, said modesty would likely have made Roberts reluctant to be on the stage.

'Roosevelt found it far more comfortable raising his fist in the air than receiving a pat on the back," Duncan told the audience. "Roosevelt was always way too busy trying to win victories for his community to stop and win awards from his community.'

Roberts was an organizer with the Black Workers Coalition, which fought for racial and economic equality in the workplace (Several former members of the coalition were recognized at the podium).

One powerful memory Duncan shared was of Roberts encountering black youth on a porch after a demonstration over police shootings. Duncan, who said many people would rather avoid youth in such a setting, recalled Roberts displaying a very different attitude.

"He said 'That's who we need to be reaching," " Duncan said. "He enlisted them in the campaign. While other people might have said they are the problem, Roosevelt saw them (as) the solution and the way to victory.'

Alliance board vice-chairperson K.A. Owens introduced Kraemer, whose activism for gay rights, he said, blossomed into work against discrimination of all sorts, as did her organization's.

"Fairness is a legendary civil rights organization that is well known throughout the country," Owens said. He added one of Kraemer's statements that he said has made an impact on him: "How we do the work and who is at the table is our work. Winning any other way is not lasting."

Kraemer, an accomplished musician, started her speech in song, noting the work of Roberts, Bette Payne and Willie Gray, all justice activists who have died in recent years: "There's a cry for justice in this land, for Bette and Willie and Rosey, too. From the black, brown and white ones and me and you.... From the gay ones and the straight ones and me and you."

She then said: "We all come to this work wounded by oppression and discrimination and hate perpetuated against us. So often we allow those in power to divide us using our differences as wedges.

'We forget that our difference is our strength. Coming together across lines of difference is what will change our world."

Studies told us that toxic air pollution from the chemical plants was dangerous.

Rubbertown chemical plants told us they would lower their air pollution.

Don't Be Fooled By The Chemical Plants!

WHAT'S STILL IN THE AIR?

CHLOROPRENE: In May 2004, an air monitor detected this toxic chemical at its highest level since 2000. According to the Department of Health & Human Services, chloroprene can reasonably be anticipated to cause cancer in humans. This chemical comes from DuPont Dow in Rubbertown.

1,3-BUTADIENE: In June 2004, air monitors detected this toxic chemical at levels almost 9 times higher than considered safe to breathe. This chemical causes cancer in humans. It comes from American Synthetic Rubber (the worst polluter of this chemical), Zeon Chemicals and Rohm & Haas. These chemical plants are in Rubbertown.

ACRYLONITRILE: In July 2004, an air monitor at an elementary school detected this chemical at levels twice the limit considered safe to breathe. This chemical can reasonably be anticipated to cause cancer in humans. It comes from American Synthetic Rubber, Zeon Chemicals and Rohm & Haas. These chemical plants are in Rubbertown.

A crisis brought home

Foreclosures explode as homeless problem worsens in area

by Ike M. Thacker IV and Eustace Durrett

It should be shouted from the rooftops, and the banking industry should be vilified no end: housing foreclosures were up by almost 400 percent in Jefferson County from 1996 to 2003! During this time period, more than 7,700 households were subject to foreclosure (that means loss of their homes!), more than 2,150 of them in 2003 alone; and the increase in the number of foreclosures just from 2002 to 2003 was 71 percent, a report by the Metropolitan Housing Coalition said.

Indiana (2.94 percent) and Kentucky (2.18 percent) were substantially above the national average foreclosure rate (1.33 percent), the MHC said in its second annual (2004) State of Metropolitan Housing Report: Homeownership at Risk.

The report said: "[p]reliminary data for 2004 indicate that the rising foreclosure trend is not losing steam, with mid-year numbers of foreclosures up 43 percent from the same period in 2003."

Why this rapid tragic increase in foreclosures? The answer is that we really don't know. We know that the foreclosure rate citywide from 2000-2002 was 1.2 percent, with two ZIP Codes experiencing catastrophic 7.7 percent rates, but, the report added, "we do not have consistent information available about the characteristics of the borrowers of foreclosed loans, or even of the loans themselves. Public records do not indicate the mortgage interest rate, or in many cases whether the loan is prime, subprime, or government insured (VA or FHA). We don't know which loans represent investment properties and which represent homeownership. We don't have critical information about the structure of the loans — including terms, fees, whether the loans are for purchase or refinance. The lack of good information on a growing and significant trend is a real barrier to addressing the problem."

To develop meaningful strategies to help families in Louisville and its environs keep their homes, we need to know whether properties going through foreclosure are for single family homes or for investment property; and whether the mortgages being entered into are prime, subprime, FHA, or VA, along with whether they are for home purchases or refinanced mortgages. We also need information on mortgage interest rates, terms, and fees; how long after purchase foreclosure occurs; the value of homes being foreclosed upon; and whether foreclosures occur most often on first, second, or third mortgages, the MHC report said.

Despite our lack of knowledge of so many particulars, it remains true that studies of foreclosure activity locally and nationally consistently report a rising incidence of foreclosure, the report said. This, it added, is especially true in low-income and minority neighborhoods, and the report pointed to two most-likely causes: the explosion of the subprime market, which provides risk-priced loans to borrowers who may not qualify for prime rate loans, from $43 to $385 billion from 1994 to 2003; and the obtaining of home loans by more people for whom their mortgage payment is at least half of their income and who have little or no net savings.

To deal with this situation, the MHC said it is convening a "Foreclosure Working Group" from November 2004 through June 2005, comprised of representatives from financial institutions, consumer groups, the court system, elected leaders, and service providers to come up with two or three policy initiatives to stem the tide of increasing numbers of foreclosures. A key goal will be to help decrease the foreclosure rate among low and moderate-income homebuyers, for whom proven methods of reducing foreclosures such as pre-purchase counseling have been "de-emphasized and de-funded," the MHC report said.

The remainder of the report looks briefly at nine measures of local housing conditions ranging from concentration of housing subsidies to numbers of homeless to the homeownership rate. We will look at these nine measures in detail in a future issue of FORsooth. For now, it suffices to say that foreclosures are only one of a panoply of serious housing problems facing Louisville, and that Louisville should not rest until all of its citizens have homes.

Ike M. Thacker IV has taught history and computer science at the university level. Eustace Durrett is an advocate for rail transit and economic equality. Both live in Louisville.

F.O.R PLANS CONSULTATION

The national FOR office in Nyack, NY will host a "Gathering of Conscience and Courage," February 18-21, for local FOR groups, Religious Peace Fellowships, and concerned individuals because the possibility of a military draft continues to hover over. They express strong support for all who declare conscientious objection and pledge to offer caring and careful counsel to those who may be impelled by conscience in the days to come.

They report that bills have cleared House and Senate committees which would authorize draft inductions by Spring 2005. These bills would include women and would eliminate educational deferments. A little known treaty arrangement already made would make refuge in Canada difficult or impossible. All this may never come about; the political costs would be high.

However, FOR wants to be ready to help. They believe that forced military service now would bring numbers of conscientious objectors such as never seen before. The "Gathering of Conscience and Courage" planned for February 18-21 at FOR headquarters will begin with dinner on Friday and end with lunch on Monday. Sleeping is available on foam mattresses in FOR offices.

Those interested should contact Ibrahim Ramey at 845/358-4601, ext.34. disarm@forusa.org No registration fee is required, but applications must be received by January 31.

FAIRNESS WINS AGAIN!

Many of us were attending the Unity Dinner sponsored by the Kentucky Alliance on December 9th when the word came that the Metro Council had just voted (19 to 6) to retain the nondiscrimination policy adopted after a long battle with city government. The resounding victory brought excitement and relief. Commendations were poured upon the Fairness Campaign for its intelligent and persistent efforts throughout the hard fight. The vote was also a sobering setback to the distorted publicity circulated by neocons in church and society whose views of moral values have little to do with justice and inclusivity. At a time when politics is bloated with bad news, we celebrate those whose patient, courageous work is shaping a better world. — George Edwards support...to survive a mayoral veto.

"Backed by unions, community organizations and advocates for the poor, the law is aimed specifically at sectors that provide services locally, and would therefore be loath to leave the city. But support has also come from far less likely quarters: businesses in the industries themselves.

"That's because most employers in these fields typically do provide health insurance for their workers...But employers who don't provide insurance, operating with lower costs, can underbid those who do-and that has local employers scrambling to find a way to keep their workers insured and their bottom line in the black."

Now, what if — what if — doctors were paid by the government to treat patients, with no lab profits, no consultancy fees, etc.? And what if the attorneys were paid by the government to insure an equitable and honest dispensing of medical care, and monitoring for competency? And what if drugs were developed simply to save human lives, and not to make drug manufacturers rich? Would that really be so bad?

The right-wing stench is everywhere. The Center on Budget and Policy Priorities reports on some of the programs President Bush has targeted for cutting in his 2005 budget (from 2004-2009): Education: Title 1 Education funds for low-income children: $660 million; Veterans' Health Services: $5.7 billion; National Institutes of Health: $2.3 billion; Employment and Training Services: $330 million; Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants and Children (WIC): $310 million; Head Start: $650 million.

Have a good day.

TELL CONGRESS TO PROTECT SOCIAL SECURITY

George Bush and Republican leaders have made phasing out Social Security through privatization and massive benefit cuts their top priority for 2005. Members of Congress will choose sides over the next couple of weeks. We need to make sure they choose correctly now before a massive election-style campaign by George Bush and Wall Street interests get to them, including what might be a $100 million TV ad campaign. Social Security is a complicated issue, but the basics are really pretty simple. MoveOn has put together a fact-sheet available at: http://www.moveon.org/socialsecurity/facts.htm/.

MoveOn wishes to gather $200,\!000$ signatures to present to lawmakers when they return after the inauguration.

You can sign the petition at: http://www.moveon.org/socialsecurity Thanks for doing this. (e-mail from Joe Martos)

In our Sunday paper (Courier-Journal 1/16/05), Representative Anne Northup makes a persuasive case for setting up private accounts. However, her article is offset by Paul Krugman's word of warning. Paul, a columnist for The New York Times, explains that the Bush plan has already been tried in Britain, and in the words of Norma Cohen (a senior corporate reporter at The Financial Times), "Britain's experiment with substituting private savings accounts for a portion of state benefits has been a failure." She continues, "A shorthand explanation for what had gone wrong is that the costs and risks of running private investment accounts outweigh the value of the returns they are likely to earn."

In a recent "questionnaire" sent to "residents" in her legislative district, Representative Anne Northup asked some 25 questions about the major economic and foreign policy issues of the second term of George W. Bush. Although it seemed at first that she seriously wanted our honest opinions, it became clear that her intention was to advocate for Bush policies. The questions pertaining to Social Security presupposed in toto that the Social Security system was soon to collapse and that the only serious alternative was privatization (via Wall Street) in slightly larger or slightly smaller degree.

On Iraq, Representative Northup presupposed (with Bush) that an exit strategy would be unthinkable. As was the case in our war on Vietnam, the administration cannot retain the favor of the Pentagon and the military industrial complex by leaving Iraq "unfinished."

On Tax Reform her policy is based on the erroneous tax exemptions of the wealthiest class in American society. To abandon the progressive tax philosophy whereby those who derive the most from the economy should bear the larger tax burden only means more and more passing of deficit government spending to our children and grandchildren. Opening public timber lands to lumber corporations certainly wins larger rewards for the Republican treasury, but it is neither a sensible or ethical way to help the generations to come.

Essays underscore complexity of Mideast peace

by Tracy McLellan

The book Live from Palestine: International and Palestinian Direct Action Against the Israeli Occupation, edited by Nancy Stohlman and Laurieann Aladin, is a beautiful book of 37 short essays reported direct from the ground of the Occupied Territories of Palestine.

If any more was needed this book is proof that by any measure of justice and decency the Palestinians are the victims of the direst repression in this dispute. These splendid essays take you as close to the Palestinians and their plight as possible without risking the death and injury of American-provided sizzling bullets, Apache helicopters, 50-ton-Merkava tanks, orwellian 3-story-tall Caterpillar bulldozers, Armored Personnel Carriers, the illegal occupation, incursions, curfews, checkpoints, roadblocks, electricity outages and water shortages.

Still many of the writers express the futility of trying to convey the depths of despair and anguish endured by the Palestinians. Maia Ramnath, reporting from Beit Jala — which Israel invaded on its way to its siege of Bethelehem and the Church of the Nativity in March 2002 — is one voice representative of most of the others: "Live ammo - now that's something I haven't experienced before. Three Armored Personnel Carriers (APCs) meet us at the top of the hill. Bullets slam into the pavement at our feet with heavy metallic bursts, throwing off sparks and shrapnel. We link arms. Our bodies form two lines that stretch across the road as three tanks drive us backward step by step. Two BBC journalists are driven for cover behind a jeep, pursued by a blaze of aggressive gunfire. I have to admit it's a relief to have the big gun's attention leave us for a few moments. But the barrel swivels inexorably back, and we continue our laborious retreat. The tank controls our speed effortlessly, accelerating toward us if we show signs of balking."

There are essays from such notables as Edward Said, Noam Chomsky, and Kathy Kelly, as well as important essays apiece from each of the editors. Hanan Mikhail-Ashrawi, Starhawk, Adam Shapiro, Islah Jad and others make additional contributions - all at the same level of excellence.

The great bulk of these essays are reports of International Solidarity Movement (ISM) delegates along with indigenous Palestinians under fire of Israeli Defense Forces (sic) over the last couple of years. ISM co-founder Ghassan Andoni stresses in an interview that when ISM or Christian Peacemaker Teams, et al. engage in the struggle they do so in solidarity, to participate by example, and to share the injustice; not to preach but to do.

It is impossible by its very nature for the outsider to be as intimately acquainted with living under this unique terror constantly with no chance of escape as are the Palestinians; nor to determine an appropriate response. Many activists frankly acknowledge their privilege to go home at any time they so choose. The Palestinians of course have no such privilege.

The activists' most critical function is often to serve as eyewitnesses, even to act as journalists to report to the outside world in the face of Israeli incursions and the concomitant closures and media blackouts. The internationals' presence does increase the safety of the Palestinians to a degree in the immediate, but even U.S. citizenship is not always enough to deter Israeli aggression against the lone activist or small contingent under fire at the Church of the Nativity, in Arafat's compound, in Jenin, Rafah, during the bulldozing of homes and orchards, and elsewhere. Ghassan Andoni notes: "Unfortunately, to be recognized as a partner in this area you need to struggle and sacrifice. When your blood mixes with the blood of Palestinians, you get recognition. And unfortunately this is what happened. ISM was boosted in the Palestinian community when the Israelis started killing ISM activists. ISM became an organization people respect and admire even in areas where it has never existed. Everyone knows who Rachel Corrie is."

Whose story is illustrative and I trust everyone knows. What is amazing and tragic is knowing Rachel better. She had previously worked at a mental health clinic, in her union, and with Olympia (Wash.) Movement for Peace and Justice. She was also a student at Evergreen State College and joined ISM. Her brief writings suggest a keen sense of justice and an overflowing heart. She was just 22 when she was murdered by an Israeli bulldozer. No one was punished for the crime, nor did the U.S. government bother to investigate the murder of one of its nationals as it would have in any other country. The driver of the bulldozer was back at work in less than a month. To U.S. officialdom her death meant as little as the deaths and woundings of tens of thousands of Palestinians, leave alone the horrifying conditions that are their daily lot.

Running beneath all these essays is the subtext of the inextinguishable spirit and indomitable will of the Palestinians, which expresses itself in unquenchable hope and generosity. Numerous times all that is left in the rubble of the golden Palestinian dreams is a single shabby mattress amongst an extended family in a single-family dwelling offered up gratefully to the odd activist, or a cup of tea split ten ways. It is sweeter when shared is the explicit and tacit universal announcement of the Palestinian character.

The book is introduced with a brief history of Palestine and Israel. Every American ought to know it or a like, which is to say a true, account. It is one they won't get from the corporate media or in received wisdom. Israel might be considered the 51st State for all the meddling and complicity of the U.S. government. The extreme repression of Palestinians could not exist without the multitudinous ways the U.S. abets Israeli criminality. As Ashrawi points out: "The United States has been the staunchest ally of Israel, supplying it with $92 billion to date, sophisticated weaponry (used to shell, bomb, assassinate, and kill Palestinians on a daily basis), and with blind political cover (24 U.N. Security council vetoes to date)."

It is inexplicable and horrifying that an accurate awareness of the situation in Palestine is practically absent the U.S. national psyche. Had the U.S. been the victim of these outrages rather than their accomplice, it would be more prominent a part of it than 9/11.

It is a pity because the solution to this problem is really very simple. Being educated to the history of Palestine and Israel should be enough to make any eyes awake from their slumber on this issue. Much of this conflict is based on racism and seeing the Palestinians as somehow being sub-human. Adam Shapiro shows the Palestinians to be very willing to negotiate and make a fair and equitable settlement which leaves them with just 22 percent of their original homeland, contingent on Israel accepting the 1967 borders. Indeed, Ashrawi's essay closes the book and cites Colin Powell's speech of November 19, 2001 as outlining the basic conditions of a viable peace: "Ending the occupation, withdrawal of Israel to the June 4, 1967, lines, removal of settlements, establishing the independent and viable Palestinian state, and bringing about a just and equitable solution to the Palestinian refugee question."

How can something that sounds so simple be so difficult? And unjust?

Man shows how to aid the destitute every day of year

by Eustace Durrett and Ike M. Thacker IV

C. Joseph Fischer (along with his concern The Louisville Company) and the Louisville Coalition for the Homeless are allied in an effort to end the scourge of homelessness in Louisville within a decade.

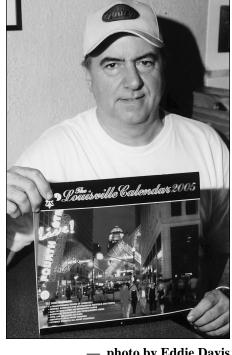

Their project is called — after the Coalition's tag line — "Homeplace Louisville: Everyone Deserves a Place to Call Home." (In 2003, homeless support services were used some 70,000 times by more than 11,000 persons in Louisville alone.)

The primary vehicle Fischer and the Coalition are using in their effort is a calendar they call The Louisville Calendar, which has a frame-quality photograph taken by an area photographer at a prominent Louis ville location appropriate to each month.

For example, there are pictures of Fourth Street Live and a scene from the Adam Matthews Balloon Festival. The calendar also has useful local information such as a map of downtown, some locally important phone numbers, and a list of downtown restaurants and their locations.

The Louisville Company's declaration is that Louisville is "a model for every city as a place where each and every citizen is Safe to Be, Stimulated to Learn, Inspired to Grow, Invited to Contribute, and Free to Enjoy Life TOGETHER." To make this declaration a reality, Fischer, through the Louisville Company, has for the past six consecutive years produced The Louisville Calendar as a way to raise money for local charitable causes; this year and in all future years the majority of the proceeds are to go, increasingly, to the Coalition for the Homeless. To achieve this noble end, Fischer has "bet the farm," sinking all of his retirement funds into the project.

This concern with helping the downtrodden, especially the homeless, is nothing new to Fischer. Between classes at Bellarmine University and Chicago's Depaul

C. Joseph Fischer and his calendar

University, Fischer (now 59) found time to work in an orphanage and on a variety of community projects. His doctorate in clinical psychology came from Depaul, and was followed by stints in Chicago, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, working both in private practice and in government-funded programs such as state hospitals. Upon his return to Louisville, Fischer worked for Seven Counties Services and then in private practice in St. Matthews. All along the way, Fischer has found and conceived of ways to help the communities in which he has lived.

But the advent of "managed care" convinced him to stop practicing private psychology and focus on yearly versions of The Louisvllee Calendar; although the company has yet to turn a profit, its calendar was the best-selling one the last year it was offered at Hawley-Cooke bookstores and it has sold as many as 7,000 copies in prior years. Fischer hopes for sales of 100,000 in 2004-2005.

The calendar is available for $13 at all Louisville branches of Republic Bank, Citizens Union Bank, and First Bank; and at Classroom Teachers Federal Credit Union, TARC headquarters (Union Station), The Frazier Historical Arms Museum Gift Shop, The Main Street Association, La Petite Patisserrie, Marcum's Gallery at Oxmoor Center, and at the Louisville Store online or on Fourth Street. The Calendar can also be ordered through the mail by sending $15 per calendar to The Louisville Company, P.O. Box 17737, Louisville, Ky., 40217-0737 and in cases of 25 for $277 ($11.08 each).

Also, there is a special business edition with a twoinch flap at the bottom where businesses can advertise themselves.

As for what prompted this idea and dedication, Fischer says that he just wanted to spend his later years doing something that helps people; his vision is much broader than Louisville alone, foreseeing "Homeplace Kentucky," (for which he already has a library of photographs to use) "Homeplace America," and perhaps even "Homeplace World: Everyone Deserves a Place to Call Home."

Louisville is just the beginning of what the psychologist-turned-calendar-promoter envisions. The single clear concern of Fischer's adult life has been helping people, whether as a psychologist, as a volunteer, or as a sort of idealistic businessman.

Fischer, the founder, owner, and sole proprietor of The Louisville Company, LLC, can be reached at (502) 777-0790 or joe@louisvillecompany.com.

He lives his life according to several of Mother Teresa's precepts, including the following: "If you are kind, people may accuse you of selfish, ulterior motives; be kind anyway...Give the world the best you have, and it may never be enough; give your best anyway."

A long-time member of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, Lawson chaired the FOR national council in Nyack. NY for a number of years. Free. Call David Sawyer, 895-3411, ext.372.
- Mar 15 (Tue) JIM WALLIS will deliver the Greenhoe Lectures during the Festival of Theology at the Presbyterian Seminary. Wallis was the founder of Sojourners (Christians for Justice & Peace) and is editor of Sojourners magazine and columnist for the NY Times, Washington Post, Los Angeles Times, and others. In 1995 he was instrumental in forming Call to Renewal, a national federation of churches, denominations, and faith-based organizations working to overcome poverty. In 1979, Time magazine named Wallis one of the "50 Faces for America's Future." He will speak twice on March 15, at 9:00 am, "Isaiah's Platform for Domestic Justice" (Isaiah 65) and at 8:00 pm, "Micah's Vision for Global Security" (Micah 4). Free. Call David Sawyer, 895-3411, ext.372.
- Mar 17 (Thu) THIRD THURSDAY LUNCH, sponsored by the Fellowship of Reconciliation: featuring SHARON WALLACE presenting "An Eyewitness Account of Life in Occupied Palestine." Sharon Wallace, a sociology instructor at Jefferson Community College, has just returned from six months in the West Bank. She will describe her work with various human rights organizations, including the International Solidarity Movement (ISM). Rudyard Kipling Restaurant, 422 W Oak St, 11:30 am buffet, $6. Reservations required. RSVP to Polly Johnson, 473-9435, or Jean Edwards, 458-8056 by Tuesday beforehand.
- Apr 13 (Wed) INTERNATIONAL DAY OF ACTION AGAINST CATERPILLAR. Over 50,000 Palestinians have been made homeless by Caterpillar bulldozers. The Israeli miliary uses Caterpillar equipment to destroy Palestinian homes, infrastructure, orchards, greenhouses, crops and even lives (Rachel Corrie). As shareholders meet on April 13, worldwide demonstrations will be held to protest Caterpillar's selling of home-crushing bulldozers to Israel. Resources available from abuemma@gmail.com
- Apr 15 (Fri) TAX DAY. All U.S. citizens are required to pay for war through their taxes. However, the Peace Tax Fund legislation would allow people opposed to war — because of deeply-held moral or religious beliefs — to stop paying for it. Instead they would pay their taxes into a special fund that would be used for non-military purposes only. Contact the National Campaign for a Peace Tax Fund, 202/483-3751, (toll free:888.PEACETAX). info@peacetaxfund.org
- July 4-8 (MTWT) YOUTH THEATER from the AIDA CAMP BETHLEHEM presented by Abed Abu Srour, accompanied by their teachers/directors. Watch for details.
